

Mary Ellen O'Connell, Robert and Marion Short Professor of Law at University of Notre Dame, spoke on "The New Militarism" on October 3, 2008, at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies.

In her talk, Mary Ellen O'Connell argued that humanitarian intervention to stop ethnic violence is not effective. Instead, she supports using tools such as targeted sanctions and no-fly zones.

Mary Ellen O'Connell was William B. Saxbe Designated Professor of Law at the Moritz College of Law before moving to Notre Dame. She was also a longtime faculty associate at the Mershon Center.

Mary Ellen O'Connell talked with Amy Cohen (center), and Ellen Deason (right), both of the Moritz College of Law, after her lecture at the Mershon Center.